Dan is a venture capital, corporate, and M&A attorney who advises startup founders, growth-stage companies, and investors on complex business transactions across the full company lifecycle from entity formation and venture financings to strategic transactions and exits.

He regularly represents emerging companies and investors in venture capital financings (seed through late-stage), mergers and acquisitions, joint ventures, and strategic partnerships. He also counsels boards and management teams on corporate governance, cap table structuring, and transaction readiness, helping clients anticipate legal issues before they become business obstacles.

Drawing on experience at international law firms and as in-house counsel, Dan brings a practical, business-focused approach to his work. He understands the pressures founders and executives face when raising capital, negotiating deal terms, and scaling operations, and he helps clients navigate those moments efficiently while protecting long-term value. Dan works closely with founders, executives, and investors to deliver legal advice that is strategic, efficient, and aligned with business goals.

Dan has particular experience working with companies in the technology, life sciences, AgTech, and FoodTech sectors, including SaaS and technology-enabled businesses. His work often involves advising companies through high-growth periods, founder liquidity events, and transactions involving both institutional and strategic investors.
